Angels Don't Play This HAARP: Advances In Tesla Technology

Synopsis

This book this video is based on was named one of the most important books of 1996 by Project Censored : The News that Didn't Make the News. The book is in its third english printing since being released in September, 1995. Translations were released in Japan and Germany in 1996. The U.S. Military's first target is the electrojet: a river of electricity that flows thousands of miles through the sky and down into the polar icecap. The electrojet will become a vibrating artificial antenna for sending electromagnetic radiation raining down on the Earth. The U.S. military can then "X-ray" the Earth and talk to submarines. But there's much more they can do with HAARP. This video reveals surprises from secret meetings. --This text refers to an out of print or unavailable edition of this title.

Using electromagnetic energies to control the weather, tamper with the capacity of the mind to think clearly, etc., is not science fiction. The great scientists, Albert Roy Davis and Walter C. Rawls, Jr., themselves world renowned experts in electromagnetics, wrote in their fourth book, "The Magnetic Blueprint of Life" (1979), that electromagnetic energies could be used to do exactly that. They stated in the book that the communications disruptions throughout the world in 1977 (1977 blackout?) were, they believe, due to experiments the Russians were doing, blasting enormous amounts of electromagnetic energy into the atmosphere, just like HAARP does. They also wrote that they believe that the upper strata atmospheric winds that control the weather have been changed (global warming?). In addition, Davis and Rawls stated that powerlines in the U.S. are above ground, unlike in Great Britain and other countries where they prefer to put them underground, and they will eventually cause a change in the protective ozone layer that surrounds the earth. Albert Roy Davis was the first scientist to discover that North and South pole magnetic fields are separate energies with different effects. For example, North pole magnetism was found to increase the intelligence and memory of animals that were exposed to it. The South pole reduced their intelligence and memory. Now, do you believe it's just a coincidence that the vast majority of telephones and headphones are configured so they radiate South pole magnetic fields into the brain of the user?? Neither do I. We're still laughably told in the media and on TV programs that nuclear weapons are the most powerful weapons in the world. So in fifty years we haven't developed weapons that are more powerful?

The High-frequency Active Auroral Research Project was named to be misleading. It was evidently hoped that those who did recognize that word "auroral" would accept the idea that the University of Alaska is studying the aurora borealis. However, if that is so, a huge amount of money is being channeled into studying a light show. Could this naming strategy deflect attention away from a deeper and hidden reason for HAARP? That is, weapons development for the military? The funding makes far more sense in that context, not to mention attempts to conceal said funding. When some people first hear about HAARP, they may default to the possibility that whoever is speaking about it may have fallen victim to yet another Internet hoax. In my opinion, this mid-nineties non-fiction research classic puts the hoax-as-only-story possibility firmly to rest. Begich and Manning do not approach this topic as speculation about who may be behind the dubious activities behind the fence, but they do point out that HAARP is part of a global cooperative effort. The facility in Alaska is not the only ionospheric heater on the planet. So it's bigger than weapons development by the US military alone. It is also copiously documented that official sources have repeatedly lied to the public about exactly what is going on. Some of the possibilities that electromagnetic manipulation can target certainly sound outlandish, so it's obvious why some dismiss the entire topic of HAARP as being a gullible tin-hat wearer's hobby du jour. Did you know that there are rivers of electrical power flowing through the sky? Nikola Tesla knew, and he wanted to harness that power to serve mankind. However, the scientific patents and procedures that eventually developed appear to be now in the service of other motives.
