This is book 2 in the McCutcheon Family series and for those of you that loved the first book you are going to eat this one up too! Caroline Fyffe has once again penned a heartwarming and yes clean romance that will leave you wanting more and ready for the next book in the series! John McCutcheon sets out for his new position as the new town doctor in Rio Wells where he is taking over for their retiring resident doctor. He's fresh out of medical school and raring to start his new life. While on the stagecoach he meets a lovely young woman named Lily (a German immigrant traveling with her elderly aunt also to Rio Wells where they plan on opening a dress shop) and is instantly drawn to her. However John is already engaged and so the fight within himself at the flair of attraction between he and Lily unnerves him. When the stagecoach is attacked by a band of outlaws John does all he can to protect and help Lily and the other passengers. Lily and her elderly Aunt are not only extremely grateful to the handsome young doctor for his valiant efforts but Lily thinks he is just as kind and brave as he is handsome. Once they arrive at Rio Wells all is not as either of them would have hoped. For John the "retiring" doctor isn't exactly retired after all and insists on staying around and helping John with his patients. Lily and her Aunt find out that even though they paid in advance for the lease of their shop the conniving banker says that he never received their payment and has leased the property to someone else leaving Lily and her aunt Harriet in a severe bind.
