Newborn Bards: A Theology Of Preaching For Unitarian Universalists

Synopsis

Though preaching matters greatly to Unitarian Universalists, we have not seriously engaged the theology of preaching. This book corrects this error by explaining the major themes of current Unitarian Universalist theology and applying these themes to the traditional questions of homiletics: the church, God, text, worship, and authority. Major homiletic thinkers are analyzed from a UU perspective, and suggestions are made for how to put these theories of preaching to use in our context. The author, the Rev. Dr. Matthew Johnson, has 11 years of parish ministry experience. He received his D.Min. in Preaching from Iliff School of Theology in 2010.

Customer Reviews

Johnson-Doyle offers so much here of value to Unitarian Universalist preachers and worship leaders. There's a great summing up of the last few generations in Christian & UU homiletics, as well as Johnson-Doyle's own ideas as how sermons fit in with our theology, liturgy, congregational models, etc. And there are six contemporary sermons in the back of the book. A very worthwhile read.
