Customer Reviews

I have returned to college to take a few classes only to discover a new textbook policy that is not only fundamentally unfair (no more reselling your books unless you want to buy a separate math lab that costs MORE than a used book), but entirely technologically flawed. Honestly, if you're going to REQUIRE that students pay hundreds more simply to access their homework online (because I'm told that most departments now REQUIRE students use these online materials), Pearson should AT LEAST put some effort into ensuring that they have first streamlined their materials. Example 1: I am signed up for an Algebra class, yet Pearson is still offering the PREVIOUS EDITION of the eBook online...and the new eBook has been out since 2012. This is a Fortune 500 company and they can do better than this. If you expect adequate, competent performance out of your students, you should DEMAND the same out of your textbook companies. Example 2: The printed MyMathLab instructions for my math class are simply clunky. The first page says "Changing Temporary Access to Full Access Instructions". WHAT!? I'm fairly certain Pearson can write this clearly if I'm paying them $150 for the privilege to use a book that ISN'T EVEN BOUND! How about "Signing up for full access to MyMathLab"? I have never had 'temporary access', and I don't think most people who open the packet up on the first day have either. Is an educational publishing company REALLY THAT DENSE!? And it gets even better on the next page, the FIRST INSTRUCTION to sign up says "Return to [link removed] or [link removed]". I spent 5 minutes pondering the FIRST TIME I'd been there...oh wait, I've NEVER BEEN THERE! Did Pearson fire all their copywriters and outsource this stuff to a remedial English class!?
